Dear Friend,

I am very grateful for new Native families and individuals that God has been bringing to Sacred Path Fellowship, the Native-focused church I help lead here in Tacoma, WA. I'm also grateful for our leadership team, which includes three recognized biblical elders plus several other non-titled leaders who serve in various ways.

Some of our SPF attendees are experiencing difficult circumstances, such as physical and emotional health issues, housing, transportation, and financial needs. Thankfully, we have a number of faithful saints who help with these, but also I often find it necessary to make time to help serve this way as well. Please partner with us in praying for healing and provision.

It is widely recognized that "generational trauma", the legacy of forced assimilation, broken treaties, and Indian boarding school abuses, is still a reality in a substantial percentage of First Nations families in North America. And this reality is evident in the lives of some of the people we minister among. Therefore, I'm very pleased to report that staff at Indigenous Bible College, Flagstaff, AZ, has produced a Native-friendly version of the "Mending The Soul" healing ministry curriculum. There are presently several of our people participating in Native Mending The Soul healing circles. I'm grateful that people are participating. There is a large need for this type of ministry. Please pray for this ministry to grow and for skilled leaders to volunteer.

Sacred Path Fellowship is one of several locations identified by NAIM leaders to potentially assign summer interns, being recruited at Bible schools and mission conferences. Our prayer is that if God chooses to send interns to Tacoma, we will be able to give them fruitful ministry assignments and that their time with us will be of great value. Please pray for good responses to our mission recruiting efforts. Most all NAIM ministry locations are hoping for more younger short-term and long-term workers.

Nancy and I thank God often for prayer and financial partners who support us in this exciting work.

Thank You,

Taylor
